Regis College at Full Computer Strength with Purchase of 74 Microcomputers

Providing Regis College students with a meaningful and applicable education requires staying abreast of rapidly changing computer technology. With this in mind, 74 new microcomputers have recently been purchased with Commitment to the Future funds.

According to Regis College President David M. Clarke, S.J., the substantial computer acquisition brings the college up to a level of service that has been desired and needed.

The first significant number of microcomputers were introduced to Regis College only four years ago. Now there is at least one microcomputer in every academic department for faculty use, there are complete computer labs on the Colorado Springs and southeast campuses, and the computer needs of the administrative offices are fulfilled. Rev. Clarke explained that the college is able to achieve maximum computer power by continually moving computers around. “Different tasks require different levels of computer ability and as progress occurs we move the computers around to fit individuals’ changing needs.” He also pointed out that the increase in computer assistance enables faculty and staff to do the mechanics of their job with greater efficiency so that more energy is left for providing human service.

Harry Alderman, director of Academic Computing, said that the new computers have helped with his department’s goal of serving the entire Regis College community. There are now four microcomputer labs (including a writing lab) and access for 64 users to a central computer system donated by Digital Equipment Corporation two years ago. Alderman, who is continually visiting large companies to examine their computer systems, noted that because computer proficiency is now needed to succeed in business and industry, graduates of Regis have an edge on their competition because of their computer exposure.

Some innovative computer exposure is being made in the new writing lab which has 11 microcomputers. Rev. James Harbaugh, S.J., chairman of the English department, said there has been overwhelming student response to this lab, with 70 percent of the students using it on their own initiative. Eleanor Swanson, assistant professor of English, and Dr. Janay Downing, associate professor of English and an expert on computer assisted learning, have put together the lab’s programs using basically three types of software packages to work with in the lab. The “prewriting” software provides an outline for the student to start with; the word processing packages include spelling checks, typing aids and content design; and “style analysis” packages (which are now being purchased) will look at the complexity of the finished piece and compare it to quality standards.

Future plans include turning each microcomputer into a multiwork station, with hook-ups to the main system, a variety of software packages available, and the capability to design programs. The purchase of “structural design” software to deal with the complexities of large scale software programs will also be needed as computer science students tackle increasingly larger community projects. These plans will be implemented in the next few years. For now, the computer needs of Regis College are being met.
Replica of Vietnam Veterans Memorial Coming to Regis

In 1982, Vietnam veteran John Devitt visited the Vietnam Veterans Memorial in Washington, D.C. He was so touched by the powerful feelings the Wall created that he and some friends spent the next two years constructing a portable, half-size replica that could be shared with communities across the country.

From Sept. 13-21, this Wall will be at Regis College. In letters a quarter-inch high, the Wall displays the names of 58,022 Americans killed in Vietnam, and the names of 2,433 officially listed as missing in action. The Wall is 250 feet long.

The Wall has had a strong, emotional impact on those who have visited it. The Regis College community is honored to have this chance to host this “healing” wall, to remember those who died in Vietnam, and to continue to be concerned with the powerful lessons Vietnam conveyed. Please mark your calendar to visit this memorial.

Regis Welcomes Hotchner and Fitzgerald

Dr. Stephen Hotchner has been appointed acting director of Theater. Hotchner, who replaces Rev. Gary Seibert who is on leave, was head of the Theater department at Colorado Women’s College for four years, and currently he is a part-time instructor of writing at the University of Colorado in Denver and a member of the Arvada Performing Arts Center. Hotchner, who has 12 published plays, is familiar with the Regis Theater after helping with the student one-act play festivals. In addition to continuing to work with the festival, he will teach playwriting and direct an all-student production of “Arsenic and Old Lace” March 13, 14 and 15.

Billie Jean Fitzgerald has joined Regis College as director of Development Business and Leadership Gifts. A graduate of Colorado College, Fitzgerald brings over five years of fundraising experience from her previous job as executive director of the Independent College Fund of Colorado. This state association, which was formed in 1956, raises general operating funds on an annual basis for Colorado College, Loretto Heights College and Regis College.

Bishops’ Pastoral Letter Discussed in Colo. Springs

A public forum for discussion on the second draft of the American Catholic Bishops’ Pastoral Letter on the Economy was held on the Regis Colorado Springs campus Feb. 2. The discussion was moderated by James Schumacher, religious studies professor at Regis (Colo. Springs) and included Dr. John Kane, associate professor of religious studies at Regis (Denver) and member of the Archdiocese of Denver’s pastoral letter team; Rev. James Richard, S.J, professor of economics at Regis (Denver); Dr. LouEllen Crawford, sociology professor at Regis (Colo. Springs) and Bishop Richard Hanifen of Colo. Springs. The testimony from this discussion has been forwarded to the ad hoc committee preparing the final draft of the bishops’ letter.

Alpha Sigma Nu Induction

Sixteen Regis College students were inducted into the national Jesuit honorary society, Alpha Sigma Nu, on Feb. 16 and 17. Selection is based on scholarship, loyalty, and service to the college and its surrounding community. National requirements are stringent, allowing only four percent of the junior and senior classes to be eligible for the society. During the weekend events Rev. Richard Blake, SJ., a visiting professor in the Fine Arts Department at Georgetown University in Washington, D.C., presented a lecture on “From Cinema to Movies: A Second Look at the American Film.” Rev. Harry E. Hoevischer, professor of psychology at Regis College was honored with the groups accolade award, Denver Police Chief Tom Coogan, was given an honorary alumni membership, and Denver philanthropist “Daddy” Bruce Randolph was also awarded a special membership.

Denver Business Recognizes Clarke

Rev. David M. Clarke, president of Regis College, has received state-wide recognition in the annual "10 Most Distinguished" issue of Denver Business magazine.

The December issue of the magazine gave brief sketches of 10 men and women who "have gone about the business of setting standards of excellence, achievement and concern for their community."

The Regis College Board of Trustees placed an ad in The Denver Post, Rocky Mountain News, and Denver Catholic Register congratulating Rev. Clarke on his being selected for this prestigious honor.

Dr. William Hynes, academic dean of Campus Programs and professor of religious studies, is the first person from Regis awarded a Travel to Collections grant by the National Endowment for the Humanities, Division of Fellowships and Seminars. He will visit Charles Augustus Briggs archives at Union Theological Seminary at Columbia University, to do research for his upcoming book comparing the modernization of Catholic and Protestant religions.

Colo./Wyo Political Science Assoc. Held at Regis

The Colorado/Wyoming Political Science Association meeting was held at Regis College on Nov. 15. There were 30 political scientists from the two-state region participating in roundtable discussions on "Current American Politics," "Contemporary Issues in Public Policy," and "Contemporary International Relations," and over 50 audience members.

Dr. Jim Riley, associate professor of political science, said he was impressed with the "high caliber of the professionally toned presentations."

Rev. Clarke introduced the event's dinner speaker, Denver City and County Auditor Mike Licht. Licht presented his views on current city administration issues including the airport, convention center and parking expansion at Mile High Stadium.

Institute on the Nuclear Age Part of Regis' Summer Offerings

We all share the unsettling knowledge that we are the first generation of Americans in the history of humankind to be faced with the prospect of one cataclysmic event destroying all civilization as we know it—nuclear war. This summer Regis College will hold an "Institute on the Nuclear Age," to provide a balanced and objective examination of the wide variety of highly contentious and controversial issues associated with the development of nuclear power and the threat of nuclear war.

In addition to several academic classes for credit, there will be a forum, open to the public, the week of July 7. The forum will include presentations from nationally prominent experts, and panel discussions representing several viewpoints. Topics to be discussed include the moral, ethical and religious dimensions of the nuclear age; the strategic defense initiative (star wars); the pros and cons of our national defense policies; the nuclear winter thesis; the potential climatic, biological and medical consequences of nuclear war; nuclear war anxiety and parenting for peace and justice; and the private sector debate involving representatives from such diverse groups as Physicians for Social Responsibility, Beyond War and High Frontier. Films and educational resources will be made available.

Although individuals are encouraged to take one or more of the courses, it is not necessary to enroll in order to attend the forum week events. For more information on the Regis College Institute on the Nuclear Age, call Dr. Daniel Clayton, planner of the Institute and director of Summer School, at 458-4914.

Other offerings of summer school include the Speech Institute for High School Students, the Challenge Yourself Institute for Young People (ages 11-15) and the Health Science Institute. For more information and a copy of the summer school brochure, call 458-4968.

RECEP Enrollment Up 15 Percent

The Regis College Career Education Program (RECEP) is surpassing projected growth rates with a jump in registrations of 15 percent. RECEP enrollment for last year reached 2,662 students.

RECEP is an accelerated degree completion program for adults with prior college and work experience, based on the Denver campus (RECEP II) and on the Colorado Springs campus (RECEP I). The program offers degrees in Business Administration, Technical Management, Computer Information Systems, and Religious Studies.

The program was started in 1979, and as Bill Husson, director of RECEP II pointed out, "The success of the program relies on the fact that we are able to offer individuals an accelerated means of completing a quality degree, in a process that is compatible with their lifestyle."

Evening classes are geared towards adults who have other commitments, primarily jobs and families. Credit is obtainable from prior work experience, and the continuous five-week sessions (eight weeks in Colorado Springs) offer a choice of meeting one or two nights a week at a variety of locations including Boulder, Loveland, and several Denver suburbs. Registration is a convenient process which can be completed over the phone or at each location.

Eighty percent of the RECEP faculty are working professionals who are selected through a unique assessment process which examines their ability and credentials to teach adult learners. Ongoing student evaluation of both the instructor and the curriculum assures a quality education. A recent graduate of RECEP noted, "The faculty is impressive, their experience as working professionals and their involvement in the business community makes a big difference. They really love their fields and get you excited about your courses. I've learned teamwork, how to handle business presentations, and to sell myself and my ideas—that's more important than anything you can learn in a traditional four-year college." Another student echoes a common sentiment, "Getting my degree is a necessary step at this point in my career, and if it weren't for an excellent program like RECEP, I probably wouldn't finish."

In a 1985 marketing study to determine student views about RECEP II, 100 percent of those surveyed said they would recommend the program to a close friend. Husson said he is always receiving compliments about the innovative program, and that many of the people have said to him, "Thank you Regis for changing my life." He also receives comments from student's employers expressing their astonishment at how the program has not only given their employees added knowledge, but new confidence and enthusiasm.

For additional information about RECEP call 458-3530.
About two weeks ago, the presidents of Jesuit colleges and educational associations gathered at the Vatican for a historic global conference. At one point the 92 men, almost all of them priests, celebrated Mass. Although the conference was being conducted in Spanish, French and English, this particular service was in English.

During one of the most reverent moments of the Mass, there was a tiny verbal collision between the 28 Americans and participants from other nations.

"SOME PEOPLE may not have even noticed what happened, but I thought it was very symbolic—as well as a little bit funny," said Rev. David M. Clarke, president of Denver's Regis College.

During the consecration prayers over the bread and wine, worshipers verbally affirm that the death and resurrection of Jesus took place for the sake of all people.

Traditionally, the prayer said "this is done for the salvation of all men." In America, concerns about male-dominated images in worship led to the dropping of the word "men."

"Well, in the U.S. women stew about an issue like that. Many men stew about it, too. And don't get me wrong, I think the role of women in the church is a very important issue..."

"Well, when we reached that point in the Mass, all of the Americans said 'for the salvation of all' and everybody else said 'for the salvation of all men...' Some of us kind of glanced at each other and smiled. Lots of other people probably didn't even notice it!"

It was a tiny, very subtle moment.

Still, for Clarke, it was highly symbolic and taught a valuable lesson.

"The United States isn't the whole Roman Catholic Church...The issue of women may be very important to us, but it's not something people think about all the time in El Salvador, or India, or the Philippines. They have other things to worry about!"

American Catholics may need to remember that fact as they turn their eyes toward Rome to observe the international synod on the affects of the Second Vatican Council.

MANY AMERICAN Catholics, especially progressives, have voiced fears the synod may result in a rollback of reforms that began in the early 1960s with Vatican II. They point to recent trends toward the silencing of non-conformists within the church—especially women.

Clarke said he would not presume to see himself as a Vatican insider, who can predict what will happen during the synod, which opens Sunday and ends Dec. 8.

But each Jesuit educator did have a moment to shake Pope John Paul II's hand and discuss how things were going at their particular campus. It was the 56-year-old Clarke's first formal introduction to a pope.

John Paul also addressed the group, speaking informally for about 15 minutes—about five minutes each in French, Spanish and English. "And let me say that the English one-third of what he said was pretty darn good," Clarke said.

"I didn't come away from that encounter with the sense that the pope was uptight about any one particular issue...I remember a few years ago when he was very concerned about priests in politics. That seemed to bother him day in and day out. I didn't see any sign that there is an issue haunting him like that right now!"

Fr. Clarke said he believes that the kinds of concerns voiced during the international meeting of Jesuit educators will be similar to those voiced during the synod. If that is true, human rights, hunger, the needs of refugees and other global issues will dominate the meetings, he said.

The conference of Jesuit educators had been in the works for about three years, Clarke said. It began with a request by the presidents of American Jesuit campuses for a chance to air their concerns in Rome. The concept then grew to include schools around the world.

There are about 25,000 Jesuit priests in the world.

Some work in countries, such as the Philippines, where right-wing governments are the norm. Others face pressures from left-wing governments, such as Nicaragua. In India, Catholics are a tiny minority. In France, the church seems to be widespread, but the reality is a land dominated by unbelief.

THIS DIVERSITY places a special stress on church leaders, Clarke said. "A policy that is fine in America, or Canada, may get a Jesuit killed in El Salvador," he said.

Clarke, who has been president of Regis since 1972, said he did see signs the hierarchy in Rome still has trouble grasping the day-to-day realities of the church in the United States.

It was hard to explain the legal challenges faced by American schools, the changing status of the U.S. government in higher education, the challenges faced by minority students attempting to finance four years in a private college, Clarke said.

Regis College has about 5,100 students and more than 4,000 are adults. One degree program in the religion department has attracted many non-ordained Catholics preparing to assume church administrative and educational roles that used to be filled by priests.

If Vatican officials are going to understand conditions in the United States, where Catholics face a free-market approach to religion and a steady decline in the number of priests, it will be because American bishops and other church leaders pushed the issues onto the Rome agenda, Clarke said.

"There is a need for us to become more real in the minds of the people in Rome who must broker our fortunes around the world."

"They do need to understand us...we need to be telling them, 'Here's where we are going,' 'Here's what we're thinking.' 'This is what we are all about.'"
Women's Basketball

One of the best things to happen to the Regis College women's basketball team this season has been the emergence of junior forward Mischelle Brown as an offensive star. Brown, who came to Regis College from Kennedy High School in Denver, has been known as one of the Continental Divide Conference's (CDC) top defensive players since her freshmen year. She is currently second in the league in rebounding (10th in the nation) and leads the conference in steals. With a scoring average of 16.2 points per game, she is the only player in the CDC to twice be named Player of the Week.

While Brown has enjoyed an All-American caliber season, she has been surrounded by a supporting cast of veteran players who have played through the team's toughest schedule ever. Senior guard Theresa Newton is typically among the league leaders in assists, and junior center Raedene Spears has also become a force around the basket, with an average of 12.3 points per game.

Junior Tammie Brethower, who converted from guard to forward this year, and junior guard Susan Henke, the team's top outside shooter round up the starting lineup.

Coach Barb Schroeder's team currently has a record of 12-11 overall and 4-6 in CDC play, with five games remaining on the schedule, including a crucial doubleheader against the University of Alaska-Anchorage. The Rangers have won eight of 11 games at home this season, so an upset of Anchorage is certainly a possibility. Also left on the schedule are road games against Denver University, Metro State and Colorado College.

Men's Basketball

Regis College basketball fans who missed the Rangers' recent win over Panhandle State University, missed one of the most impressive victories of the past decade.

Panhandle State, a perennial NAIA power, came into the game having won 11 of its last 12 games. The Rangers played their most aggressive defensive game of the season and dominated the visitors on the boards to secure their 12th win of the season.

The Rangers' scoring attack has been led throughout the season by senior forward Cevin Hopp, who averages 13.4 points per game. As usual, Coach Lonnie Porter has employed a balanced lineup and uses nine players equally in nearly every game. Junior guard Sam Batey has been the team's most consistent outside threat, averaging 9.0 points per game, while junior guard Adam Simental has picked up some of the slack left by injured point guard Dean Miller, and is now hitting 7.8 points per outing.

Junior forward Richard Duncan, senior forward Chuck Wahlheim, junior forward Chris Rogers, sophomore forward Clint Wilson, junior forward Kevin Childress and senior guard Robert Osley are the rest of the team members.

Regis finishes out the '85-86 campaign with games against Colorado Mines, Metro State, Denver University, Kansas Wesleyan and Colorado College at home, and a pair of road contests against New Mexico Highlands and Santa Fe.

Forward Kevin Childress makes a jump shot in game against Metro State.

Investment or Gift?  A Regis Gift Annuity is Both!

"A charitable gift annuity is a way to receive a guaranteed income for the rest of your life and to make a significant contribution to Regis at the same time. The rate of return is higher the older you are. Because a gift annuity is partly a gift and partly an investment, a portion of the amount you invest is tax deductible. In addition, part of the annual payment you receive is free from income tax. Gift annuities may be purchased at $1,000 or above. Your annuity gift will assist in building the Regis College endowment."

Advantages:

Fr. John J. Callahan, S.J.

Guaranteed income
Immediate tax deduction
Income that is partially tax free
